When your security becomes our business, you can focus on yours.

Providing a higher level of security with Protective Intelligence

Fully understanding the operating environment helps identify assets and physical security vulnerabilities which threat actors may be interested in creating opportunities to exploit. These may include unintended access points, bypassing normal access points by blending in with crowds or environmental factors like building designs that obstruct line of sight and low-light areas.

The Four Major Asset Classes, which ones concern you the most?

Zones of Control and Proactive Security Measures

To be effective, security needs to be proactive. Proactive security includes monitoring and creating areas of control for hazards, or unintentionally created issues, and threats, or intentionally created issues with malicious intent. These zones include visible physical security deterrents near assets and hidden, countersurveillance agents within areas of control identifying and controlling issues before they arise.
